To-day, as we rejoice to believe, it is at least hopeful. The kirsh Recruiting Council has begun its work well. Its action has been practical and courageous. The first open-air recruiting meeting since the Rebellion of 1916 has just been held in the streets of Dablin. The degrading apathy of the last two years shows signs of disintegration in the first week of its read work the Council obtained one thousand recruits, and it is said that the results of the second week have been equally good. It appears to be certain that the Belfast district has resolved to find its quota, and so to make itself exempt from conseption. Nation—alist Ireland, if she has any political antelligence—to say nothing of patricisms and of loyalty to her fallen sons—can hardly fail to accept that challenge. If Doublin and Belfast decide to "make good, the east of Ireland will have received a valuable stimulus to action. It is be lieved that a large majority of recruits up to the present have enlisted for ebe Reyal Air Force, whose material and mit tary attractions have been a special feature of the Recruiting Council's appeals. The Reyal Air Force is aumagnificent body, and all its members, from "ace" to mechanic are making every dry more effective contributions to the victory of the Allied canse. We trust that thousands of young Ireshmen will claim the proad moto Per arrhae and artice before the war is won. At this moment Ireland is on her trial before humanity. She has failed in the supreme test that Providence has applied to the whole of civilisation. She has grieved and disappointed her most faithful and most powerful friends. Loved hitherto throughout the English-speaking world as an ardent follower of high ideals and an impetuous champion of liberty, she has lost that reputation so completely in two years that an American journal can now talk of her as exhibiting "in an unbelievable measure the curse of pure lievable measure the curse of pure or so steep and sudden a fall from grace. and few, perhaps, for the punishment that will follow if there is not a swift change The Right Hon. I do not wonder that Mr. T. P. O'Connorfeels, as he tells us in the Daily Chronicle, a little home sick for America. It was rather hard upon him to be called upon almost at a moment's notice to draft the Nationalist Party's counter-blast to the Ulster manifesto. It will hardly enhance either his literary or his political reputation. Even the faithful Westminster Gazette does not appear to think Mr. O'Connor's effusion of much importance, for, after observing that it "does not lack point or directness"—a little bit of sugar for the bird—it proceeds to express doubt as to "whether the controversy in any of its aspects is helpful to Ireland, Great Britain, or the Allied cause, and adds the useful reminder that "President Wilson has his own sources of information about Ireland, and is not likely to accept party manifestos as a substitute."

SERIOUS CONSEQUENCES OF CORK STRIKE.

The strike of Cork dockers still continues, and the prospects of a actilement seem as remote as ever. Through the intervention of the Lord Mayor and the Chairman of the Harbour Board, representatives of the employers and the dockers met vesterday, but failed to come to torms. The failure to agree means the withdrawal of two more ships from Cork, with serious consequences to the trade of the port.

The terms of the Vorkshire miners strike pertinents were reported to the meeting of the Council at Barnaley resterday. Shopmen are to work fifty-one hours per week, with half an hour daily allowed for meals. All storpages made owing to men leaving work earner to be repaid.
